Synopsis
"FIRE WHEN READY"

Kidnapped by Barbara, daughter of the railroad president, and taken for a long ride in her automobile, Ted Adams is late for his new job. He has been promoted by the president to the position of engineer, but when he arrives at the roundhouse an hour late, the train has been sent out with another engineer at the throttle, and the furious president demands an explanation of Ted's lateness. Suddenly Ted realizes that he can't embroil the president's daughter and so he is forced to refuse any account of his actions. He is fired; and Peggy his sweetheart, tells him she'll "never speak to him again." Heartbroken, he goes away, only to come back and hang around the station.

A message comes in to the station that a car loaded with dynamite has broken loose and is crashing down the mountain grade. The local is due! Ted takes a wild engine and with Tim firing, speeds down the track three miles to a siding, where he hopes to shunt the explosive car off on the side track. But to his horror he finds the siding occupied by the local, and learns that a special, carrying the invalid daughter of a prominent motor boat manufacturer, is hurrying the sick girl to a hospital. Orders have cleared the line for the special. Ted is frantic. He can't shunt the dynamite car to the siding, and can't let it crash into the special. Finally he sprints to a small bridge that spans the track, leaps to the careening death-car as he shoots past, and stops it with the hand brakes. Then he couples in his engine and tows the explosive car back away from the special, as the latter screeches to a halt. Ted is rewarded with the offer of a job from the big manufacturer, and Peggy forgives him when Barbara herself explains his lateness.
